City officials and El Sereno residents gather under Soto Street Bridge | Nathan Solis
By Nathan Solis

The Soto Street Bridge appears to have a date with a wrecking crew after a city staff report said that the nearly 80-year-old El Sereno span was not worthy of historic monument status, which could have kept the bulldozers at bay.

The nearly 500-foot-long bridge, which once carried Red Car trolleys over the junction of Soto, Mission Road and Huntington Drive, had been nominated by the El Sereno Historical Society as a historic landmark as the city prepares to demolish the structure for a traffic and safety improvement project. A historic monument application prepared by historian Charlie Fisher claimed that the bridge was historically significant because of its Art Deco-style and as an example of the Pacific Electric Railway network.

But a staff report by the Department of City Planning challenged those claims, saying the bridge was not a "particularly outstanding or distinctive" example of Art Deco style. In addition, the report said there were many other remaining pieces of the Pacific Electric Railway "that may better convey the essence of this significant railway system." The report recommended that the city's Cultural Heritage Commission, which oversees landmark nominations, reject the monument application for the "Pacific Electric's Soto Street Bridge."

It's not clear how the Cultural Heritage Commission will respond to the staff recommendation.

Part of the nomination process included a field trip to the bridge organized by the Office of Historic Resources. On a rainy afternoon in February, the commissioners, who traveled via a city van, along with residents, members of the historical society and a police escort huddled under the Soto Street bridge, where beer bottles, dead pigeons, rubbish and loose gravel littered the ground.

Fisher spoke to the crowd on its historical significance. Though his voice was drowned out by the sound of traffic, the small crowd paid close attention. The bridge carried the Pacific Electric Railway Red Car over Mission Road until the 1950s when the tracks were removed. Now the bridge feeds into El Sereno from Soto Street, diverges, with roads going over, under and branching off from Huntington Drive into Lincoln Heights and Boyle Heights.

During the field trip, architect and commissioner Richard Barron stood under the bridge and detailed the process of reviewing sites that could be declared Historic Cultural Monuments. When asked if he was familiar with the bridge before the nomination Barron hesitated. "I was somewhat knowledgeable of the historical significance. I never stood underneath the bridge before," said Barron.

In 2001 the Bureau of Engineering reported that the bridge did retain many of the Art Deco ornamental elements and might qualify for the Bridge Improvement Program that would restore bridges throughout Los Angeles. But a 2002 report from the California Department of Parks and Recreation stated that the Soto Street Bridge "has lost its historic function and lacks integrity of materials, design, feeling and association."

A 2004 study from the Department of Public Works, Bureau of Engineering found the Soto Street Bridge a "seismic hazard" and proposed that the bridge be demolished as part of a restructuring for traffic flow.

The bridge is an eyesore to nearby resident Perry Petschar who has lived across the street from the bridge all his life. "During rush hour it takes forever to cross, because there are no traffic signals. It was built for something that doesn't exist anymore," says Petschar referring to the railway car.

When the commissioners and police escort left the site, a handful of people wearing T-shirts in support of saving the bridge lingered. Jorge Garcia, of El Sereno's Historical Society, his wife Yolanda and their son stood under the bridge as traffic went by, and cars honked their horns.

Yolanda Garcia mentioned that as a child her family traveled over the bridge when she would visit her grandmother in Boyle Heights. It has always signified coming home for her.

"It's been neglected. I would hope that the bridge does receive monument status, because we might have memories of landmarks after they're gone, but why not save them instead?"

5 Trial date set in L.A. Councilman Jose Huizar sexual harassment case

Tue Mar 11, 2014 9:55 pm (PDT) . Posted by: asncaalert

By David Zahniser

March 10, 2014, 11:10 a.m.

A judge on Monday set a Nov. 10 trial date for the sexual harassment case filed by a longtime aide to Los Angeles City Councilman Jose Huizar.

Superior Court Judge William F. Fahey scheduled the date after Michael Eisenberg, an attorney for former Huizar aide Francine Godoy, said he is looking to call "potentially 20" witnesses in the case.

Fahey questioned the need for so many witnesses and a lengthy trial, asking Eisenberg: "Isn't this a he-said, she-said situation?"

"There are a lot of issues," Eisenberg responded.

Godoy, who worked for Huizar for seven years, has accused her former boss of waging a campaign of retaliation and harassment against her after she refused to provide "sexual favors." Huizar, 45, has called those claims "false and malicious" and said he had a consensual relationship with Godoy. That relationship, Huizar said, prompted him to apologize to his wife and four children.

A lawyer for the city would not comment. During Monday's hearing, Fahey asked Godoy's lawyer how many people had witnessed the activities alleged in the lawsuit. "Well over 10," Eisenberg responded.

Huizar, who represents neighborhoods stretching from Boyle Heights to Eagle Rock, is running for a third and final four-year term in the March 2015 election. Godoy joined his staff in 2006, earning about $47,000 annually. When she left last year, her yearly pay was more than $132,000, according to personnel officials.

Last year, Council President Herb Wesson ordered the formation of a special committee to investigate Godoy's claims. Weeks later, Eisenberg refused to let Godoy appear before the panel, saying he did not believe the council would be impartial when reviewing its findings. He pointed to Wesson's appearance at a Huizar campaign fundraiser, where he described Huizar as his "best friend" on the council.

Council members also must decide whether to pay $185,000 to settle a lawsuit filed in the wake of a car crash involving Huizar. In 2012, Huizar was driving a city SUV when he rear-ended a car driven by a former Huntington Park police officer.

Soil Testing Finds Elevated Lead Levels

Department of Toxic Substances Control Orders Exide to Take Corrective Action

SACRAMENTO – Senator Kevin de León (D-Los Angeles) released the following statement regarding the Department of Toxic Substances Control's (DTSC) review of the Off-Site Soil Sampling Report, dated February 18, 2014.

"Our community deserves swift action—polluters must be held accountable. I urge Exide to comply immediately with DTSC's order to begin mitigation steps to assist vulnerable families and expand the soil sampling testing area to fully understand the scope of the problem. Our residents have the right to know the full extent to which lead levels constitute harm."

A community meeting on the lead testing result is scheduled for March 19 at Resurrection Catholic Church in Boyle Heights.
